The exhibition and forthcoming publication are supported by LAWPRO and Creative Ireland and will run until 21st December.

Public Art:

- Dublin City Public Art Programme: Work continues on developing the approach to the pilot projects under Strand 1- Public. The City Arts Office will have a report on a proposed approach to Citizen Commissioners for the next ACAG Meeting. There were 36 proposals from all art forms and different practices for Strand 2 – Art which were assessed by two external public art experts. Short-listed artists will be paid a fee for further development of the proposals. There were 16 proposals for Dublin Docklands Light Commission to install a permanent light installation on City Quay. Short-listing of proposals is taking place on the first week of November.

Proposals for Permanent / temporary Art:

- The ACAG members were given details of a proposal by Niall Bracken for a 'landmark' piece in Dublin Bay which would represent Ireland throughout the world. The Group considered the proposal but believe that it was underdeveloped in its detail and that such a proposal would best be commissioned on an open completion basis. In addition to the considerable costs of many millions, the proposal would have to be subject to an environmental impact study (EIS) and design and engineering detailing. Therefore it was unanimously agreed not to support this proposal.
- The Samaritans applied for a temporary display of a sculpture based on the Samaritans Badge. Entitled, 'Always There', this sculpture was created by prisoners in Dublin's Wheatfield Prison to mark the 20th anniversary of Dublin Samaritans' listener service in conjunction with the Irish Prison Service. The Group had concerns about the security of the external display of this sculpture and thought that it might be subject to vandalism or theft. The Public Art Officer was invited to liaise with the Samaritans to see if a safe space such as a shopping centre could be found for the display of the sculpture.
- A proposal from Orla Donohoe for a music-meets-water installation in the Blessington Basin consisting of water fountains 'dancing' to choreographed orchestral music was also considered. This proposal was deemed to lack suitability for the Blessington Basin and could negatively impact on local flora and fauna and that the scale of the proposed installations as cited in Dubai or the Canary Islands require a far great space.

Cllr Roe stated that more attention and financial input should be directed for the maintenance and care of established monuments and statues in the city centre. The Public Art Officer reported that he was meeting with the Heritage Officer and Central Area Public Domain Officer to discuss the maintenance of the statues on O'Connell Street.

AOB:

Cllr. Roe enquired about 'Meanwhile' use for some vacant buildings in the city and noted that while focusing on suburban areas in terms of its cultural infrastructure it is also important to concentrate on the cultural life of Dublin city centre. Cllr. Roe will put the issue of vacant buildings on the agenda of the next SPC. Ray Yeates added that the good will of developers is important in terms of addressing the need for cultural spaces in the city and a balance needs to be sought between the vocational needs of the City Council and the commercial needs of developers. The City Council has no tradition of building artists workspaces, its power lies within the Planning and planning implementation realm. Sunil Sharpe suggested that there should also be a focus on protecting cultural spaces and enquired as to whether there would be strict implementation of the developers 'Tool Kit' going forward and if there would be an inclusion on the protection of cultural spaces in the Infrastructure report.

Concerns were expressed about the cultural life of the city being hollowed out. A request was made to put this concern on the agenda for discussion at the next meeting of the City Council. Cllr Roe agreed to this request which was also supported by Cllrs. Dearbhail Butler and Claire Byrne. The rise of anti-social behaviour in Dublin city centre and its impact on cultural events in the city was also addressed. Recent anti-social behaviour at Meeting House Square and The Ark in Temple Bar were discussed and the need for audiences to feel safe when they are engaging in cultural events in the city was emphasised. Ciaran Taylor and Willie White emphasised the need to raise this as a matter of urgency at Council level and for the problem of anti-social behaviour to be addressed at a strategic and city wide level. The City Arts Officer confirmed that he would raise this matter directly with the Chief Executive of Dublin City Council. The dereliction of the Eden premises in Meeting House Square and the increase in anti-social behaviour at this particular setting was also raised as an on-going concern in this context.

On foot of a discussion regarding the lower number of visitors to cultural venues in the city centre due to the Covid crisis, enquiries were made regarding the current status of the City Recovery Plan and Task Force, getting an update the Nigh Time Economy and feeding concerns to the next Temple Bar Cultural Trust meeting. The importance of Working Groups beginning their work as soon as possible and the need for the City Council to permit changes was reiterated. The City Arts Officer confirmed that these concerns will be raised at the next SPC meeting on November 22nd by elected representatives. Deadlines for motions for the upcoming SPC is 9th November. Cllrs. Byrne and Roe confirmed that they would raise concerns about the city recovery at this upcoming meeting.

The lack of quality and durability of the street furniture in the Temple Bar area was raised as a matter of concern. A call was made for the City Council to require private business to standardise street furniture to ensure it is of a good quality going forward. Cllr Byrne requested that a letter outlining these matters be forwarded from the ACAG for the Agenda of the next meeting of Temple Bar Cultural Trust and the City Recovery Task Force.

Having drawn attention to the lack of gender diversity of the arts representatives on the Art Culture Advisory Group, Willie White proposed that Ruth McGowan of Dublin Fringe be invited to participate in the ACAG going forward. This proposal was approved by the Arts and Cultural Advisory Group.
